SOUTHERN PINES GARDEN CLUB

A SANDHILLS TRADITION SINCE 1948

Since its founding in 1948, the Southern Pines Garden Club has been active in the cultural landscape of the Sandhills. “Knees in the dirt” members established the mature trees and shrubs that now define the downtown Southern Pines landscape, and their voices shaped the preservation and development of the exceptional standards that the town enjoys today. Throughout the organization’s rich history, their generosity has elevated the community through countless beautification projects and educational opportunities. Today’s membership is dedicated to building on this worthy legacy.

A DUNNAGAN HOME

Built in 1965, the home was originally part of the Firestone Estate, Mile Away Farm. The fencing along Old Dewberry is from some of the original "Pappy Moss" fencing. The house was remodeled in 1993 to include a new master wing. An open design, the house is mostly one room deep, creating lovely sun-filled spaces. A Carolina Room runs across the back of the home opening to a terrace with a relaxing fountain, brick fireplace and gardens. The home sits on 10 acres which includes paddocks, a barn and a pickle ball court. The Dunnagans have owned the home since 2017 and have extensively redesigned the interior spaces to welcome the outside in. Shades of rust, pale blue, green and gold reflect the pine straw, sky and grass in a seamless transition from the entrance and across the wide expanse of the elegant home. The bright kitchen opens onto a breakfast room that is surrounded by windows.

B INCHALENE

Inchalene, which is Gaelic for "cottage near the woods," has been a part of Southern Pines history for almost a century. Built in 1924 for James Boyd's mother, the house was designed by Alfred Yeomans, and the grounds were originally designed by Frederick Law Olmsted's firm. The original correspondence between Mrs. Boyd and the Olmsted firm resides in the National Archives in Washington, D.C. Inchalene is a wonderful example of an English Tudor-style home, with steep, gabled slate roofs, arched doorways, heavy ironwork, copper gutters, strong window mullions, large chimney pots and stucco with wood accents. The house is surrounded by walkways, bucolic fountains and walled gardens overlooking rolling pastures. It even has a classic English conservatory as well as separate stables. Enjoy the current homeowner's extensive collection of paintings, bronzes and pieces from the 1920's.

C FOX HOLLOW FARM

A warm and inviting home that lives up to the name "equestrian estate," Fox Hollow Farm originated as a gristmill that dates back to the 1780s. A stone well house still exists today. Purchased 20 years ago by the current owner, the home has been extensively renovated. One wing and the garage feature stones from Virginia that match the stone well house. Another renovation included weathered bricks from Italy. A rough hewn front door is thought to be from the original cabin formerly located on the 10 acre farm. The elegant home includes spa-like bathrooms, complete with heated floors and towel bars. A screened in porch overlooks a pond and terrace. An enormous fireplace looks onto extensive camelias and azaleas. Rather than the typical pine floors that grace most houses in the area, this home sports floors that are imported wormy chestnut. One special bedroom overlooks a waterfall of descending stone steps. Truly a home where no detail or creature comfort has been overlooked inside and out.

D THE HEALING GARDEN

You can admire nature's beauty in its purest form in The Healing Garden, nestled between the property of the Clara McLean House and the Pinehurst Greenway Trail. Inspired by classical English design, The Healing Garden boasts traditional elements with whimsical touches. Paths lead the visitor to garden rooms with seating for quiet reflection, prayer or conversation, or to simply admire the view. The children's garden offers fun and discovery with soft green turf dotted with large topiaries and life-size chess and checkerboards. Seat walls of Tennessee Fieldstone and a secluded water feature with streams and waterfalls offer a place to "sit a spell." Unexpected finds will delight the visitor throughout the garden: benches tucked into secluded spaces, art pieces adorning formal areas, boulders engraved with inspirational words scattered along paths, wildlife feeders and nest boxes hidden among the plants.

E SANDY WOODS FARM

Step back in time before the stock market crash and experience a true sense of history. Built in 1927, Sandy Woods Farm is set among 2,000 acres of beautiful pine trees and a lake. A gracious Georgian home with Flemish bond brick, this magnificent mansion features a light-filled center foyer with a grand staircase featuring an expansive Palladian window and exquisitely designed moldings and doors. The living room includes warm, wood paneling and a portrait of the current owner's mother. The library, which boasts beautiful scalloped bookshelves nestled among warm creamy woodwork and original Gracie wallpaper, looks onto the broad expanse of lawn. The kitchen, in its original configuration, includes walls of glass-framed cabinets. A separate two-story addition houses extra bedrooms downstairs. Upstairs are more bedrooms featuring beautiful views of the back lawn and groves of pine trees. A lovely carriage house addition graces one end of the home.

F VAN PARIS HOME

This home was built in 1985 and sits on 5 acres along the 6th hole of the Cardinal Golf Course in the Country Club of North Carolina. Previous owners transitioned the colonial architecture into a new modern home in 2018. Current owners had professional designer complete the home's interiors which honors the home's traditional style, while incorporating creative, modern elements that opened up existing spaces and capitalized on the spectacular views. The home opens onto an outdoor living space, perfect for entertaining and a separate space for their teenage son to host friends. The kitchen is light and bright with updated appliances. The library, originally wood paneled, is now painted navy blue. The home perfectly reflects the homeowners' elegant yet relaxed lifestyle.
